How to plan your next party.

Sir Cumference and Lady Di of Ameter want to throw a surprise birthday party to cheer up the king. But organizing the guests becomes a problem of mathematical proportions. How many lunches do they need? How many dinners? Where will they all sleep? And how will they coordinate the special Royal March of Greeting?

With help from Sir Tangent, Sir Lionel Segment, and Sir Kell, the guests form number neighborhoods, making it easy for Lady Di to determine how many guests there are and how to arrange her party in an orderly fashion.

Young readers get a lesson about the concept of place value with hilarious illustrations that are full of the helpful details that have made the Sir Cumference series the most fun way to learn math.

Cindy Neuschwander is an elementary school teacher who loves teaching math. She got the idea for Sir Cumference while visiting medieval castles in England. Cindy lives in Pleasanton, California.
